He was an avid reader and through this passion he gained much knowledge and wisdom that was enhanced by his many life experiences. He was always quick to share this with us all whether we wanted to hear or not. He had a love for music which he nurtured all his life and found much comfort even during his illness. He enjoyed fishing, boating, hunting, and trapshooting. He loved cooking and often surprised his wife with one of his newest creations. Also, needlepoint became a favorite and his masterpieces are proudly displayed in his home.

Jay will be remembered as a kind and respectful man who preferred to be surrounded by family and a few good friends than many acquaintances. He was strong willed and worked through life's hardships stoically which he demonstrated right up to his last breath. He often borrowed Harry Truman's quote, "The buck stops here." to resolve issues. He was an example for all. No matter how you knew him; Jay, Dad, or Pop he stayed true to himself and strived to be there for each one of us. He will live on in our hearts.
