“ I learned so much from my Mum when she was here and have learned even more now that she is gone. She was loved and appreciated by many people. She was very much a lady of the old school. She had great dignity, laced with humor and fun. She loved to give parties and was always the consummate hostess. She new the value of good friends and beautiful things and surrounded herself with both. Her love for me was quiet but sure and only as I grew older did I realize how much she cared for me in spite of our differences. Although she was very fortunate in many ways, she had her share of challenges as we all do and met them head on with grace and perseverance. She was my hero at the very end. Knowing that her race was run, she accepted the fact and went gently, softly to a better place, free of all the pain she had suffered these last 8 months. I am truly blessed to have been able to share that moment with her.
